

Statement of participation

rosagomeez

has completed the free course including any mandatory tests for:

Rights and justice in international relations

This 13-hour free course explored whether the concept of human rights can be applied across international borders and the problems that arise.

Issue date: 4 January 2025

www.open.edu/openlearn

This statement does not imply the award of credit points nor the conferment of a University Qualification.
This statement confirms that this free course and all mandatory tests were passed by the learner.

Please go to the course on OpenLearn for full details:

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/society-politics-law/politics/rights-and-justice-international-relations/content-section-0>

COURSE CODE: DU301_1

Rights and justice in international relations

<https://www.open.edu/openlearn/society-politics-law/politics/rights-and-justice-international-relations/content-section-0>

Course summary

Can the concept of human rights be applied across borders or are rights culturally specific? Is it realistic, or even desirable, to aim at an international system based on universal principles of justice? This free course, Rights and justice in international relations, takes a critical view of the assumption that 'rights are a good thing' and looks at the problems that arise when they are applied in the international arena.

Learning outcomes

By completing this course, the learner should be able to:

- understand the different interpretations of internationally recognised notions of rights and justice
- give examples of implementing justice in an international sphere
- investigate questions in international studies
- analyse the different agencies of change in the international system.

Completed study

The learner has completed the following:

Section 1

International human rights an introduction

Section 2

The United Nations settlement

Section 3

Defining rights

Section 4

Defining justice

Section 5

Rights in the international arena

Section 6

International justice – communitarian and cosmopolitan perspectives

Section 7

Conclusion

Section 8

Further reading